35th Annual Review of Continuing Education in Dentistry
Survival in Paradise: Dentistry’s Emerging Role
Survival in Paradise: Dentistry’s Emerging Role

Dentistry has contributed to society’s well-being since our profession’s inception. And forensic dentistry has made unique contributions by helping to investigate major crimes and mass disasters. A new law (AB 2210) adds momentum to plans for Dentistry to assume an important new role. This role will enable the dental team, with some additional training, to help defend against a possible bioterrorist attack and to provide emergency medical care in the event of a formally declared emergency.

This course will first use material from actual cases to illustrate the techniques used in forensic dentistry to investigate cases of homicide, rape, child abuse and other crimes, as well as mass disasters, such as those that occurred on 9/11/2001. It will then discuss the types of terrorist attacks that might require dental participation. And it will present the types of services that the dental team may be required to provide, and how to prepare for them. Following instruction, there will be group participation exercises. One will involve preliminary instruction in medical triaging of casualty victims and the dispensing of antibiotic medication and administration of smallpox vaccine at a large scale public health point of distribution center. Another exercise will demonstrate the analysis of human bite marks.

As a bonus, this course will also fulfill the mandatory relicensure requirements for infection control and the Dental Practice Act.

Upon completion of this course participants should:

• Have an increased familiarity with the forensic dental identification methods used in single cases and mass disasters, as well as the controversial techniques of bitemark analysis
• Have an improved understanding of their legal duties in detecting and reporting abuse of children, elders and other dependent individuals
• Have learned the possibilities and limitations of entering the field of forensic dentistry
• Be aware of the opportunities to perform important forensic services in daily dental practice
• Know all dental healthcare providers can be involved in their local public health department’s community response plan in a mass disaster, including participation in the mass medication/vaccination clinic
• Understand the basic principles of medical triaging of casualty victims
• Know what personal protective equipment is needed, both for disasters and the daily workday, and what supplies are needed to shelter in place at the dental office or at home
• Be familiar with the signs, symptoms, and treatment exposed to various agents, including bloodborne pathogens and emerging diseases
• Have an enhanced understanding of infection control principles, Universal/Standard Precautions and the California Dental Practice Act
• Be able to provide a safer environment for both patients and the entire dental team
